[redacted] attended meeting of the Interdepartmental Chemicals Statistics Committee which considered the problem of suppression of statistics. The committee was convinced that no significant suppression of statistics during the current emergency would be tolerated by either government collecting agencies or the American public. There seemed to be unanimity of opinion that the problem of suppressing significant information in the Congressional Record or the Federal Register would be almost impossible. It is the CIA representative's opinion that if this proves to be the case the effort to suppress statistics is wasted.
